- To encourage the restoration and preservation of extant instruments by supplying historical and technical information;
- To reprint reed organ publications, including advertising, catalogs, brochures, and booklets;
- To locate, preserve, publish, and record extant reed organ music; to encourage new compositions and arrangements; and to promote the performance of music written expressly for reed organs;
- To foster education and scholarly research in the reed organ field;
- To create and maintain liaisons with related organizations and institutions to support these purposes.

Who Should Join?

Anyone interested in free reed instruments! Founded in 1981, the Society is an international nonprofit organization devoted to the appreciation, study, collection, restoration, and preservation of reed organs. The scope of instruments ranges from lap organs, melodeons, harmoniums, parlor, chapel, and church organs, to mechanical player organs, whether they be foot-pumped, hand-cranked, or motorized.

Membership Benefits

The ROS Quarterly, published four times a year, contains information, articles on reed organ history, news of members' activities, and advertising. Music and performance reviews, resource materials, expert restoration advice, and organ identification requests are featured regularly.

A membership Directory lists members' interests and specialties. This directory facilitates correspondence and permits members to meet and examine collections, trade, buy, or sell organs, parts, photographs, recordings, books, music scores, and other memorabilia related to reed organs.
